Harry Potter is a normal boy with two exceptions, his parents died suspiciously when he was young and he has few friends. All of this changes when he is invited to study wizardry at Hogwarts, a castle-like school where students learn to use magic. He meets and befriends Ron, a fun goofy guy, and Hermione, a smart muggle. A muggle is half wizard and half regular human. These friends help Harry adjust to school when strange events start to happening. To find out Harry's real identity and who is behind these strange events, read Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone by JK Rowling. "Harry, why do you have a lightening shaped scar on your forehead?" On the back:

Harry Potter seems like an average guy at first. Later, we find out that he is a unique individual with the power of a wizard. At the beginning of the book, Harry is shy and does not stand up for himself. He never stands up for himself with his muggle family, the Dursleys. When Dudley treats him badly, Harry is not able to stop him. As he begins attending Hogwarts, he starts to speak up for himself and even becomes more of a leader at school. This quality is really necessary because he needs to outsmart and be courageous against the evil forces against him.
